Description

This image was taken as part of a human-interest article the Episcopal Diocese of Atlanta featured in their annual publication, Pathways.

Using a 50 mm camera and a 17-45 mm lens, the photographer used natural light and shadows to give the photographs more character, texture, and depth. This image is of the main subject of the publication's cover story, "Growing Something Good." Robert Currey started a mushroom farm in an economically depressed area of Georgia. Here he stands inside an old furniture factory which has been repurposed to house three greenhouses. Currey implores his fellow man to look at their communities to do what is right and take action.
